SATURDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1903.

The greetings of another Christmas again remind us of the "Peace on earth, and good will towards men," which was proclaimed to the world more than nineteen hundred years ago on the advent of our Redeemer, and we should rejoice and be glad at this season of the year but in a spirit of love and charity towards everyone, and of thankfulness for all our blessings in the past and which we have reason to hope for and expect in the future if we will strive to be more like Him whose birth will soon be celebrated through the length and breadth of Christendom.

It is our right to be happy at the Christmas time and we will be, if we do not forfeit it by the lack of that peace and good will, which is the essence of all happiness—if we will discard all the bitterness, jealousies and selfishness which enter so much in the lives of all of us and for the time, at least, give that sympathy and love and help to those less fortunate than we are, which the glad season teaches.

As the season for the exchange of gifts among relatives and friends, for the renewal of acquaintances and festive cheer, all old and young, should welcome it and we will not only enjoy it but be profited thereby, if instead of indulging in the excesses so often incident to it we find in its pleasures, rest and recreation the stimulus which will lead us to a higher and better life—and who does not need it and will not welcome it if we are made better by it? This is what Christmas means and the world not only needed it centuries ago but we do to day.

With best wishes to all the readers of the "Enterprise" for all the comforts and happiness of a bright and beautiful holiday season, wherever the ymay be or whatever their environments, we extend the cordial greetings for a Merry, Merry Christmas.

Is there a Santa Claus? This was the query of a little girl, with the name of Virginia, whose little friends had told her there is no Santa Claus, which was sent to the New York Sun many years ago, and below is given the answer by that journal, which at once took a place among the Christmas classics of the language and is printed every year in the newspapers throughout the land.

"Virginia, your little friends are wrong. They have been affected by the skepticism of a skeptical age. They do not believe except they see. They think that nothing can be which is not comprehensible by their little minds. All minds, Virginia, whether they be men's or children's are little. In this great universe of ours man is a mere insect, an ant, in his intellect, as compared with the boundless world about him, as measured by the intelligence capable of grasping the whole of truth and knowledge.

"Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and generosity and devotion exist, and you know that they abound and give to your life its highest beauty and joy. Alas! how dreary would be the world if there were no Santa Claus! It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginias. There would be no childlike faith then, no poetry, no romance, to make tolerable this existence. We should have no enjoyment except in sense and sight. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would be extinguished.

"Not believe in Santa Claus! You might as well not believe in fairies! You might get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas eve to catch Santa Claus, and, should he catch him, what would that prove? Nobody knows what that would prove. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not; but that's no proof that they are not there. Nobody can convince or imagine all the wonders that are unseen and unseeable in the world.

"You may tear apart the baby's rattle and see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world which not the strongest man, nor even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived, could tear apart. Only faith, fancy, poetry, love, romance, can push aside that curtain and view and picture the supernatural beauty and glory beyond. It is all real! Ah, Virginia, in all this world there is nothing else real and abiding.

"No Santa Claus! Thank God, he lives forever! A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay, ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood."

Members of the Corporation Commission make most emphatic denial that any compromise of the rate cases was suggested by the railroad lawyers. They insist that it was merely a conference as to procedure and that rates were not discussed. "The commission has no secrets when transacting public business and this rate case is the public's business," they declare.

For the first time in its history the State of Virginia will have a "dry" Christmas in the sense that no liquor may be lawfully dispensed in any city, town or county on December 25th. Under the terms of a statute enacted at the last General Assembly it may be sold, all places where it is usually sold being closed on that day.

Hawthorne, the veteran publisher and probably the most influential editor in the State, has been called to cancel his license to publish a newspaper because of a nervous breakdown returned to Richmond for treatment.

Negro Shot and Killed.
Saturday afternoon last, a short distance from Onancock, near the farm of Mr. Sydney Hopkins, David Burton was shot and instantly killed by Clarence Parker.

Parker and Thomas Topping had been gunning and stopped at the row of houses occupied by colored people. Topping having decided to leave his gun in one of the houses, he returned from Onancock. While Parker was waiting for him, David Burton came up driving a mule to an open wagon, halted, and a conversation at once began between them. It is said that Burton passed on to what was to be the shot when Parker raised his gun and fired, almost blowing Burton's head from his shoulders. Parker claims that he thought he had taken the cartridge from the gun, and had no thought or wish of hurting Burton. He was arrested Sunday by Constable Kellam. All of the parties are colored people.
